ROSEBERY DISPLAYS CRAZE FOR SECLUSION

Brilliant and Versatile Statesman
Becoming More and More of a Misanthrope.

BY LA MARQUISE DE FONTENAY.

LORD ROSEBERY, probably the most brilliant and versatile statesman since the days of Pitt, filled the office of Premier of the British empire during the last hundred years, is becoming more and more of a misanthrope, displaying a craze for seclusion, and even isolation, which is causing his relatives and friends to be alarmed. He has virtually turned over his principal Scotch country seat, Dalmeny, in Linlithgowshire, to his eldest son and heir, Lord Dalmeny, and to pretty Lady Dalmeny, who is a granddaughter of the first Duke of Westminster, and has retired to his much smaller place in Middlethorpe, known as Rosebery, and from which he takes his principal title.

There he is now devoting himself to the construction of a private chapel, and, above all, of a family mausoleum, including a tomb for himself, the new buildings occupying a tree-shaded site at the northern end of the mansion. The chapel and mausoleum, which are of red sandstone, are modeled on the ancient fabric of the Parish Church in the neighboring hamlet of Temple, which is part of a monastic edifice erected by King David I. for the Knights Templars, or the Red Friars. This establishment was originally called Balantrach, and was the chief seat of the Knights Templars in Scotland.

Rosebery is beautifully situated, along the Moorfoot Hills, and was purchased by the earl's ancestor, Sir Archibald Primrose, in the reign of Charles II. It was sold by the second Earl of Rosebery, and was out of the family for over a century, when above ninety years ago it was repurchased by the fourth earl, namely, Lord Rosebery's grandfather and immediate predecessor.

Although the patent of the earldom was made out in 1703 as "Rosebery," with one 't' (not counting the initial letter), the successive earls styled themselves "Rosebery," with two 'R's, until 1841, when the additional 't' was dropped. Lord Rosebery can boast of a medical ancestor. For he is descended from Archibald Primrose, who was president of the Edinburgh Royal College of Surgeons, as far back as in 1559. One of his sons, Dr. James Primrose, was King James I. of England.

At the instance of the Prince Regent of Bavaria, the Prime Minister of that Kingdom, Baron von Bismarck, issued an official statement, bearing upon the persistent rumors current of late, according to which the crazy King Otto is to be deposed at the end of the current year, and the regent to be proclaimed sovereign in his stead.

The statement is to the effect that in the opinion of the royal family, of the government, and of the most eminent judicial authorities and legal experts in Bavaria, no such step is practicable under the terms of the existing constitution. Before Otto could be deposed as incurably insane, and his crown placed on the head of the prince regent, the Constitution would have to be revised. This would be a somewhat lengthy and tedious process, even if all the necessary votes were assured.

When a proposal by the government was made to the effect of the late King, the greatest safety of the nation in this sense, the Centre or Conservative party, expressed a disinclination to adhere to any such move; not because they entertained any objection against the new regent, Prince Louis, but owing to their fear that any alteration of the Constitution for this purpose might lead to popular demands for a revision of the Constitution in a more liberal and democratic sense. The greatest safety of the dynasty, so they declared, lay in the principle of the inviolability of the Constitution. As their votes were necessary for any revision, that ended the matter, for the time being.

It is asserted that since then they have changed their mind, and have come to the conclusion that it would be better to take the risk, attendant on a modification of the Constitution, rather than continue, as at present, with a completely lunatic King on the throne, who has never had a sane moment since his accession to the crown.

and the sovereignty of the nation vested in the hands of a prince regent. The latter, they argue, can never exercise the same degree of necessary authority, either in domestic affairs, or in his relations with the German empire, or with foreign nations, as could a full-fledged king.

That Otto will, in due course, be deposed is in view of this altered state of sentiment among the Conservatives, now an assured fact, especially as the rumors of his illness have been officially denied, and the fact proclaimed that he is likely to survive for many long years. But nothing of this kind will be done just yet, and the present regency of Prince Louis will be maintained until the revision of the Constitution has been duly voted upon by the people and enacted.

The police in several big cities of the United States and also of Canada, will be interested to learn of the arrest of the thirty-year-old Baron Ivan Engelhardt, of the German-speaking provinces of Russia, and formerly an officer of one of the crack regiments of the Czar's Guards, on a charge of obtaining a couple of hundred dollars from one of the leading restaurants, Unter den Linden, by a check of the Credit Lyonnais, to which he had signed the name of Prince Dolgorouki. It is an alias of which he boasts, as well as of the name of the Baron and Count von Rosen. Indeed, his nefarious activities over here, under the latter alias, were a source of considerable annoyance to the then Russian ambassador at Washington, Baron Roman Tormasov.

The Berlin police, since his arrest has become known, have been busy receiving accusations against him from Germany, and have been made acquainted with his criminal record in Vienna, London, St. Petersburg, Paris, and along the French and Italian Riviera. Good looking, with excellent manners, an inexhaustible fund of anecdotes, and conversation, he made friends everywhere easily, and found no difficulty in obtaining money by false pretences and fraud. Now he is booked for a long term in jail at Berlin.

King George's new minister plenipotentiary at Lisbon, is the Hon. Lancelot Carnegie, hitherto counselor of the British embassy in Paris, and a brother of the present and seventh Earl of Southesk. He is a very delicate man, carrying with it the salary of £2,000 a year, plus an officially furnished legation building. For, owing to the residence in England of the deposed King of Portugal, and of the similarly exiled Queen Mother, where they are treated with royal honors at court, and as near and dear relatives of the British reigning house, there is a considerable amount of ill feeling against England, and against the British leaders and authorities at Lisbon, which renders the government there reluctant to live up to the terms of the old standing treaties between the two countries.

Lancelot Carnegie, however, is a man of great tact, coupled with decision of character, just the diploma to deal with such a situation, and his appointment to Lisbon meets with universal approval. Lord Southesk, his half-brother, is a scion of the great Scottish clan of Carnegie, to which the Laird of Skibo belongs, and it may be recalled that a few years ago he came to America to receive the honorary degree of doctor of laws of the Western University of Pennsylvania, on the occasion of the Founders' Day exercises of the Carnegie Institute.

The late Lord Southesk was particularly well known in the Northern of this continent. As Sir James Carnegie traveled extensively in the United States, and was several pleasant books about America, at a time when it was less familiar to Europeans than it is to-day. Afterwards he devoted much of his time to exploration, in fact, there are several towns to-day, on both sides of the Dominion border, that bear the name of Southesk and of Carnegie in his honor, rather than that of the great Pittsburgh Ironmaster, a brave donor, and author of "Triumph of Democracy."

SULZER'S LAST DAY AT MANSION QUIET

After Late Breakfast Spends About Four Hours on Automobile Ride.

HIS EFFECTS BEING PACKED

Plans, Other Than Contemplated Trip to Cooperstown, as Yet Unmade.

[Special to The Times-Dispatch.] Albany, October 19.—Ex-Governor Sulzer's last day at the Executive Mansion was a very quiet one. The occupant of the "People's House" slept late and did not go to church. About noon, after a late breakfast, he and Mrs. Sulzer left the Mansion in the State Highway Department's automobile and spent about four hours riding through the Heiderbergs, the mountains south of Albany. It was dusk when the Governor returned, and he was not recognized as the car sped through the city streets.

Sulzer's effects are being packed up at the Mansion. Already several big boxes of personal belongings have been shipped and more will follow to-morrow. By to-morrow night the former Governor's household will have been moved to Cooperstown, where he will reside.

A friend of the family said, however, that the Governor will take a few days' rest before he does much of anything. Sulzer is seated in Harry Benson's Hotel, at Cooperstown, and it is possible that while there he will spend some time with Stephen C. Clark, the millionaire owner of the Knickerbocker Hotel in Albany. It is hinted that Clark might even become the former Governor's "angel" if such was needed. During the fight the Knickerbocker had been one of Sulzer's most ardent supporters.

The new Governor, Martin H. Glynn, also spent a very quiet day. He was at his summer home, at Cedar Hill, in the west bank of the river, when he came to Albany in his automobile and attended the 10:30 o'clock service at St. Mary's Church. He was met and greeted by hundreds of friends after the service. Governor Glynn expects to take up his residence at the Executive Mansion on Saturday, and the duties of his position in the executive offices to-morrow. All day Saturday the clerks were busy in packing up what belonged to Sulzer and boxing it for shipment to Cooperstown.

A force of cleaners went into the executive chamber, Governor Glynn said.

I expect to go in the executive office to-morrow if everything is in readiness.

There was no communication between the former and the new Governor.

NEWS OF EASTERN SHORE

Anacostock, Va., October 19.—Reverend and Mrs. J. Watkins Lacy, of Accomack, will receive their friends Monday evening from 8 to 11 o'clock, in being the fifteenth anniversary of their marriage. Mr. Lacy is pastor of the Presbyterian Churches at Accomack and Anacostock.

At Lottsburg, Va., L. Flannigan, of Richmond, was ordained into the Presbyterian ministry on Sunday at the Bello Haven Presbyterian Church. He was also installed as pastor of that church at the same time. The services, conducted by Rev. Charles Friend, of Hampton, a former pastor, were very impressive. Rev. Mr. Dodge, of Cape Charles, delivered the charge to the pastor and the Rev. W. Lacy, of Richmond, charged the congregation.

Sweet potatoes are now selling for $1 a barrel, the lowest price that has been reached in this section. A third of the crop is still in the ground. The yield has been almost as wonderful as the Irish potato crop. The outlook for fall Irish potatoes is exceptionally good. The crop of this year is the largest ever grown on the Shore.

The cornerstone of the new Lower Northampton Baptist Church was laid Friday by Governor Lacy, of Anacostock. The building will be of pressed brick, with terra-cotta trimmings and a concrete foundation, and when completed will have cost $18,000. The old church, built in 1840, which is to be replaced by this handsome structure, was built 127 years ago. The pastor, Rev. W. C. Foster, gave an interesting history of the church, and an instructive talk was also made by R. D. Garland, of Richmond.

Miss Edith Lewis was taken to a hospital in Baltimore for treatment, having swallowed a piece of oyster shell. Little hope is entertained of her recovery.

Mrs. Benjamin Thomas Scott has issued invitations to the marriage of her daughter, Emily Sangle, to Harry Sangle, and Thomas, on Wednesday, October 29, at Johnson's M. E. Church, South, Johnsontown, Va.

There are now sixteen schools in Accomack County doing High School work. Three of these, Anacostock, Accomack and Parkley are accredited. Three other schools are doing the required work, but on account of the small number of scholars they have not been added to the accredited list.

REDUCING SUGAR IN DIABETES

To prove that sugar can be reduced in many cases of Diabetes in people past fifty we will mail on request formula for quantity of insulin to be taken, which will show the percentage from day to day.

Diabetes is largely on Codein, admitted to be harmful. Under Fulmer's Diabetic Compound the thirst often begins to abate and the strength to increase before the sugar shows much decline, thus patients often know the case is responding before the tests show it.

If you are of middle age or over and have Diabetes, do not owe it to yourself and family to try Fulmer's Diabetic Compound before giving up.
